Five Canzonets.

No. 1.
Sylvan.

Long, long ago when the moon was a maid
And the little gold stars were children small,
You had your home in the forest glade
And I lived alone in a water-fall.

You piped and sang in the woodland glade
And forth I ran at the magic call,
And oh! we laughed and loved and played,
And nobody cared at all.

Long, long ago when the moon was a maid
And the little gold stars were children small,
When you were a faun in the forest glade
And I was a nymph in a water-fall.

Helen Taylor.

No. 2.
When summer comes.

When summer comes I'll steal away
And find the land of shining day,
I'll rest beside the singing streams
And make myself a house of dreams.

I'll build myself a palace fair
Of silver dew and golden air
I'll hang it all with rainbows bright
And dwell within it day and night.

The west wind will my playmate be,
And all the stars will sing to me,
And gleaming sun and falling rain
Will make my spirit young again!

Helen Taylor.
No. 3.

A Sunset Song.

The sun dies in his flaming shroud,
There's one cloud in the sky,
A little rose-flushed tender cloud
Bidding the sun good bye.

The weary daisies shut their eyes,
The birds are weary too,
And I, while daylight slowly dies,
Still dream and dream of you.

The sun has gone; your voice I hear,
Your eyes I almost see;
Oh, do you in the twilight, dear,
Still dream and dream of me?

_Helen Taylor._

No. 4.

A Song of Rest.

Day is for work and play,
Day with its toil and heat,
Night comes—for night we pray,
Night comes—and night is sweet.

Hard though the pilgrim way,
Tired though the pilgrim feet,
Rest comes—to close our day,
Rest comes—and rest is sweet.

_Helen Taylor._

No. 5.

A little Love Serenade.

On lutes of silver
The winds are playing,
The leaves are dancing
In raiment bright;
O'er morning meadows
Young Love is straying,
And piping, piping
For your delight!

The heavens are opened,
The lark is winging
Through fading rainbows
To fields of blue,
My heart is piping,
My heart is singing
Is dancing, singing
For love of you!

_Helen Taylor._
